Using the Intercultural Perspective to Make Race Visible: Supporting A Critical Understanding of Race Across Cultures

Through building a bridge between intercultural competence and diversity, this workshop will offer concepts and exercises to prepare you for both understanding racial constructs across cultures, and for global intercultural experience with an understanding of race. We will sample student exercises and discuss the links to intercultural development, and explore using the concept of white identity and related developmental models as frameworks for learning.

Dr. Sherwood Smith is Senior Executive Officer for Engagement and Professional Development, and a lecturer at University of Vermont's Department of Integrated Professional Studies. In the past he worked as a Peace Corps volunteer in Tanzania, as adjunct faculty for the School for International Training's college program in Kenya, assistant director of residence life at Pennsylvania State University, faculty at the Summer Institute for Intercultural Communication (SIIC) for twelve years, and guest speaker at China's Inner Mongolia University (2012). Sherwood teaches courses and workshops that focus on issues of prejudice, cross-cultural influences on development, racial identity, and multicultural education.
