I. Play As Work: The Creative and Professional Use of Games for Community and Team-Building

In a highly experiential and dynamic workshop we will engage in a range of noncompetitive, nonsexist games, activities, icebreakers, and exercises that are easy to set up and teach and are specifically designed for intercultural settings. We will focus on adapting and debriefing games and activities for diverse groups, and you will receive a series of handouts for your own use. Come prepared to play, work, and enjoy!

Dr. Daniel Cantor Yalowitz is an international trainer and consultant whose work focuses on community-building, conflict transformation, archetypal psychology, social and emotional intelligences, and play. As a former dean and vice provost for graduate education at the School for International Training Graduate Institute in Brattleboro, Vermont, and Washington DC, Daniel has facilitated credit-bearing courses, presentations, intensive trainings and workshops, conference keynotes, and plenaries in 88 countries to date. Daniel's primary focus through all of his professional endeavors is on social justice and equity issues. He is a committed community activist whose work has been featured on TV and radio in the U.S. and UK.
