Play as Work: The Creative, Professional Use of Games for Community and Team Building

We don't stop playing because we grow old; we grow old because we stop playing. ~ George Bernard Shaw

Learn how to better infuse and integrate your teaching, training, and workshop design with non-competitive, non-sexist play and activities! In a fun, experiential, and dynamic day-long course, we will engage in a range of absorbing (and sometimes challenging!) icebreakers, energizers, activities, exercises, and games that are simple to set up, easy to instruct, and may be modified for intercultural settings. We will focus on adapting and debriefing games for diverse groups that you'll be able to readily draw on. You will receive a packet of handouts and informative materials to further integrate workshop content. Come prepared to play, work, and enjoy!

Dr. Daniel Cantor Yalowitz is a global consultant, trainer, and educator and the co-founder of New England Educational Consulting, working with higher education and secondary schools across the USA and abroad. Daniel focuses his professional energies around themes of intercultural communication, conflict transformation, community building, social/emotional/multiple intelligences, social justice, gender, play, and archetypal psychology. He has delivered programs in 88 countries, and continues to refine his understanding and work as a global citizen and activist. He is a consultant with the International Peace Boat and designs programs on board and abroad for that organization. His new book, Journeying with Your Archetypes: The Search for Deeper Meaning in Daily Life, is due out in the late spring of 2018. Daniel is the former dean and vice provost at The School for International Training Graduate Institute in Washington, DC and Brattleboro, VT.
