A. Leadership During Intercultural Uncertainty

What is the role of the leader when we live in polarizing times? How does the leader create space for individuals from all walks of life, with diverse perspectives, to come together and accomplish the goals of the organization? How does the leader remain objective? In this workshop the focus will be on exploring the leadership research, and its application to the uncertainty we face in our lives.

Dr. Helen Abdali Soosan Fagan is a leadership and diversity scholar and consultant with over 25 years' experience in the human resource field. She is currently the president of Global Leadership Group and a lecturer at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. She studied international economics and British political economy at Oxford University during the formation of the European Union. In 2000, Helen became the first coordinator of a nationally recognized diversity and cultural competence initiative for a large health system in Nebraska. During that time, she played a key role in the recruitment/resettlement of nurses from the Philippines, addressing employment and healthcare needs of refugees and immigrants. She has received multiple awards, most recently Professor-of-the-Month by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln: Mortar Board.
